We welcome applications from doctoral students in the late stages of their education, research or postdoctoral fellows who completed their doctoral degrees no earlier than 1 May 2021, and faculty members in the first three years of their academic careers (we do not accept applications from LL.M. or undergraduate students). If an applicant has a career break due to the pandemic or family obligations, the committee will review eligibility on a case-by-case basis.

The Workshop

Participants will be encouraged to develop their research and writing toward law-and-society topics relevant to Asian societies, advance their knowledge and understanding of the field, and build a diverse intellectual community. The workshop offers insights into key debates and analytical trends in the field; research methodologies; writing and publishing. Participants will receive feedback on one's research project and papers. The program will consist of seminars led by senior and emerging law and society scholars.

Application for the workshop will be competitive. Applicants trained in law, the social sciences, and humanities are welcome. Participants will be asked to submit a paper or a chapter of their written work for presentation and discussion during the workshop. This paper may be presented at the ALSA conference as well.
